Walk in Sister's Shoes:

The Drexel Fund gives us a huge opportunity to talk about the treasure part of Catholic stewardship. This morning we combined a little bit of our Social Science into Religion by talking about taxes and how that money helps support those less fortunate among us (as well as many other services).

I expected the students to say that they would not be happy with part of their money being taken away to help others. They did not. I can't decide if I have the most giving students or they're just that inexperienced with receiving money, that not one objected to part of their "salary" being given away! I have a tendency to lean to the latter. However, I would really like to see if their money is where their mouth is. During this entire Drexel campaign, I would like to ask you to make your child really work for their spirit dress days, or additional contributions. I will ask you parents at the end of the campaign how they really did. Did they work towards their contributions or did mom/dad just provide them with the money. Of course, that's your purgative, but I want to see how freely offering they are with "their" money. Help me perform a little undercover work while making a difference.
